Featured speaker:

Paul Rosolie is a naturalist, explorer, author and award-winning wildlife filmmaker. For the past decade, he has specialized in threatened ecosystems and species in countries like Indonesia, Brazil, India and Peru. In 2013, Rosolie spoke at the United Nations global Forum on Forests while accepting an award for his Amazonian wildlife short-film, “An Unseen World.” His 2019 debut novel, “The Girl and the Tiger,” examines the complex modern realities of endangered tigers and elephants, based on a true story.

In this timely and fascinating multimedia event, Paul Rosolie discusses the conservation threats facing tigers and elephants, and how literature can influence public consciousness towards conservation.

Books will be available for purchase and signing by the author following the presentation.
